

American composer Susan McFarland Parkhurst (1836-1918) is remembered for her popular songs and piano music. Her compositional career after her husband, E.A. Parkhurst, died in action during the Civil War. After taking a job at a music store she befriended Stephen Foster who encouraged her work.

Anna Caroline Oury (1808-1880), who was commonly called Ninette, was the German-born daughter of a French aristocrat who was also the director of the National Court Opera in Mannheim. He was very supportive of his daughter's talent in piano and composition. A student of Carl Czerny, she heard Beethoven improvise, and performed for Chopin - who was so impressed as to dedicated his Waltz in F minor to Mme. Oury.

American pianist, composer, and educator, Helen Hood (1863-1949) was an important figure in the Second New England School of composition. A student of B.J. Lang, John Knowles Paine, and George Chadwick, Hood also was fortunate to continue her studies in Berlin, which was a privilege not available to many women. Her compositions included songs and chamber works.

Louise Haenel de Cronenthall (1836-1896) was born into a musical family in Naumburg Germany, the daughter of a piano maker. At age 17 de Cronenthall moved to Paris to study piano, cello, flute, and composition at the Conservatoire. She stayed in Paris throughout her life and was a prolific and well respected composer, writing in small and large forms. Her oeuvre includes works for voice, chamber ensembles, and full symphonies.
